AMERICAN SILVER NATIONALISATION EFFECT ON FAR EAST

CONFLICTING OPINIONS AMONG EXPERTS

Bishop Charles Fiske, Central New York diocese of the P. E. church, criticises President and Mrs. Roosevelt as parents because of the divorces of their children, Anna Dall and Elliott, and declares that it "seems to us a family disgrace, a disgrace to the nation and a disgrace to the Church of which the family are members and in which they are occasional worshippers."

DEFLATIONARY EFFECT FEARED BY MANY

NEW ERA OF PROSPERITY LOOMS DECLARES SENATOR THOMAS

BLOW TO GOLD BLOC

NEW YORK, TO-DAY.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S ORDER NATIONALISING SILVER AT 50.01 CENTS PER OUNCE, IS INTERPRETED DIFFERENTLY IN VARIOUS CIRCLES. THE SILVER GROUP HOLD THAT IT WILL INCREASE PURCHASING POWER IN THE FAR EAST, WHILE OTHER MONETARY AUTHORITIES ARGUE TO THE CONTRARY. BY INCREASING THE PURCHASE OF SILVER CURRENCIES IT WILL HAVE DEFLATIONARY INFLUENCE IN EASTERN COUNTRIES, THE LATTER STATE.

One effect will be the suspension of the open market for silver in the United States.

The proclamation prompted active selling.

Financial circles regard the proclamation is indicating a more vigorous pursuit of the silver policy outlined in the Silver Act of 1934.

AN EXPECTED RESULT OF THE TEMPORARY ACCELERATION OF SILVER BUYING BY THE TREASURY IS A RISE IN THE WORLD PRICE OF SILVER.

ACTIVE BUYING ON FOREIGN MARKETS GENERALLY IS EXPECTED.—REUTER.

Sharp Impetus To U.S. Business.

PROPONENTS' THEORY

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.

Washington, To-day.

Silver theory regarding nationalization as follows:—

Firstly, the Government will henceforth regard silver as money rather than as a commodity, and therefore will enter the world unavailable at home in order to build up currency reserves, causing worldwide competition which will result in an advance in the price of silver.

Secondly, foreign Governments will then begin selling the dollar cheaper, thus reducing the purchasing power to the 1926 level.

Thirdly, the advance in the price of silver throughout the world will cause manufacturers in silver-using nations to raise the price of products, especially textiles, which

ANOTHER PROTECTION STEP

Reno, Nevada, To-day.

The Chairman of the United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Key Pittman, said that the proclamation was another step to secure and protect silver as standard money.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

NO SILVER PLAN LEAKAGE.

Washington, To-day.

Mr. Henry Morgenthau has denied the reports that a leak in the silver plans caused a rise on the New York market.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Stock Traders Hesitant.

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.

New York, To-day.

Many stock traders are hesitant as they do not know the interpretation of the nationalisation order.

Favourable factors are that the dollar declined due to inflation sentiment, and the strength of commodities.

Unfavourable factors are the continuation of the drought, and disappointment at the president's speech.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

KNITTING MILL STRIKE

New York, To-day.—More than 12,000 workers in 200 knitting mills have struck, but the mills continue to operate.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Washington, To-day.

The Treasury Secretary, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, told pressmen yesterday that the Government, in nationalising silver, was exercising its right of "eminent domain," he added.

Some circles on the Stock Exchange regard the move as an indication that the Government will try to answer the agitation for inflation by a more vigorous pursuit of the silver purchase plan.

Senator Thomas, of Oklahoma, one of the leaders of the drive for the rehabilitation of silver, is hailing the announcement as "the overthrow of the worldwide gold bloc and the beginning of a new world monetary system and a new era of prosperity."

DECISION REACHED AT 11 O'CLOCK

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.

New York, To-day.

The Treasury has instructed that all silver shall be delivered to the mints within three months The nationalisation proclamation was contained in an executive order by President Roosevelt, issued under Section XII of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934.

Mr. Morgenthau said that national was necessary due to the rising cost of silver, plus the fact that the Treasury cannot pay more than 50 cents per ounce.

The decision to nationalise was reached when silver quotations reached 49.5 cents per ounce at 11 a.m., (East Standard Time) in New York, yesterday.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Reports On Acquisitions.

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.

Washington, To-day.

Mr. Henry Morgenthau states that he will shortly issue regulations requiring every person owning, controlling, or possessing silver on August 9 register his holdings with the Treasury. Reports will be required on all silver acquisitions after yesterday.

He warned the public to keep records of their holdings because "accuracy will be required."—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

BANK NOTE CIRCULATION RECORD SET UP

Striking Reflection Of Business Recovery In Britain

London, To-day.

Note circulation by the Bank of England for the week ended August 8, exceeded £392,000,000, the highest figure ever recorded.

The increase was due to holiday requirements and is regarded as evidence of the increased spending power of the people.

The city editor of The Times describes the figure as a striking reflection of business recovery.—Reuter.

INFLATION THREAT

BRITISH PRESS COMMENT

NOT EXTENSIVE OR ALARMING.

London, To-day.

President Roosevelt's intentions with regard to the dollar are still secret, but his silver policy undoubtedly makes for further currency expansion states the Financial Times in a leading article, to-day. Direct of The Journal declares [illegible] is that foreign observers, who are afraid of further inflationary moves, are more than ever convinced of the correctness of their views.

The Daily Mail also states that the change means a certain degree of inflation, but not very extensive, or alarming.

The News Chronicle city editor, on the other hand, declares that the Interpretation of the edict as a signal for a fresh dose of inflation is not shared by operators in London.—Reuter.

PRECISE MOVE TAKES LONDON BY SURPRISE

Higher Silver Price To-morrow.

MARKET COMMENT

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL

(By Telegraph, Copyright, Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1891. Received August 10, 9.04 a.m.)

London, To-day.

Commenting on President Roosevelt's silver programme, Messrs. Pixley and Abel, bullion dealers, yesterday told the United Press:

"The first effect should certainly be a higher silver price to-morrow due to speculative buying, but the long term effect is difficult to estimate without a fuller knowledge of how to plan operations. At any rate, the immediate repercussions will be the most important."

Another bullion broker told the "United Press" that it had "been obvious all the afternoon that something had been brewing."

"We have been inundated with queries but are unable to figure the probable effect on the world price until we examine the details," he declared. "Generally speaking, London did not expect this precise move."

President Roosevelt's announcement arrived long after the official market had closed and the unofficial market was virtually closing.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Following Plebiscite On August 19.

HONOUR FOR GOERING?

Berlin, To-day.

Several Cabinet changes in Germany are pending, but an official announcement is not expected until after the plebiscite on August 19.

It seems likely that the Vice Presidency and the Vice-Chancellorship will be united under one man who will fill the role of Deputy Reichs Leader.

Candidates mentioned are the Prussian Premier, General Goering, the Minister of Defence, General Werner von Blomberg, and Herr Alfred Hugenberg, the newspaper "king."

$2,000,000 KWANGTUNG BOND LOAN

BUSINESS TAX AS SECURITY.

FINANCE REHABILITATION

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Canton, To-day.

Government will float short term treasury bonds on September 10 for a period of three months. These bonds will be secured by the business tax and the title deed tax.

The bonds are divided into four denominations, namely $100, $50, $10 and $5, the interest being 10 per cent. per month and not one per cent., as was erroneously reported by an official news agency.

At the end of the third month, the Provincial Department of Finance will set aside $25,000 a day for one full month as interest to the holders of the bonds, which are to be distributed by the Kwangtung Provincial Bank. Holders of bonds are given the privilege to re-sell or mortgage the bonds to a third party.

No definite reason is given for floating this latest loan, although it is understood that the money realised will be used to stabilise the

The Woman's Page

Sleeve Style In Fahion

Moyen Age Waist-Lines.

Those dresses with the long Moyen Age bodices, and waistlines at the hips, have been taken up by certain of the exclusive fashion houses, whereas others refuse to lower the waist-line in their daytime clothes. Most of the smartest women, however, insist on a personally adjusted waist-line, placed wherever it looks normal, though it may be some inches above or below There is a tremendous differing in sleeves in this season styles and they aim to allow for successful treatment of shoulders and arms by the individual woman. Big sleeves, fitted sleeves, peasant sleeves, and cape sleeves are all in fashion, as are short sleeves, long sleeves, elbow, length sleeves and also three-quarter length sleeves. Take your choice of the sleeves that make you look most attractive.

Capes Worn

Coats that are loose vie with coats that are fitted, and both are smart. Suits with long jackets are as smart as those with short, and capes are worn with all kinds of dresses.

THE TILTING HAT.

Each individual hat this season has its special tilt. This is most important. Some are worn tipped forwards, others to the right or left, and there is the hat that has "walked off the head," and leaves the coiffure exposed. French women are pinning up their Basque berets with huge gold or silver pins.

Dance Dress For Society Bride.

A lovely dance dress made for a Society bride in London was carried out in ice-blue chiffon, the bodice draped halter-wise, and the skirt, rather fuller than usual, dotted over with dark blue appliqué velvet spots the size of a sixpence. A velvet sash outlined the waist, and was wastened with a row of four ice-blue glass buttons.

WALK FOR BEAUTY AND HEALTH

Makes Eyes Brighter And Body Lighter

A MILE A DAY

Walking, makes for health and health begets beauty—which look in the mirror before starting is good enough reason for walking a mile a day. Aren't eyes brighter, skin more glowing, body lighter and more supple?

Learn to enjoy your daily walk. Smile; think pleasantly of other persons, interesting things you've done, amusing places you've visited—not just of the fact that you have to take his bit of exercise to preserve health and beauty. Walk briskly with head up and see how soon you forget your troubles. Difficult situations often seem less troublesome after you've covered the first quarter of a mine.

Walk Briskly

Walk with weight on the outside edges of the balls of your feet and your toes will point straight ahead instead of turning outward in graceless manner. Let your whole body swing. Arms should be free and allowed to move back and forth, so if you want to get the most out of walking, leave your purse at home instead of tucking it under an arm.

GARDEN COACH

The newest garden "coach" is a comfortably shaped lounge fitted with two wheels at one end and two legs and handles at the other.

Made in plain unpolished wood or lacquered in scarlet or some other gay garden colour this is a useful piece of bungalow verandah or garden furniture, for it is an ideal sun-bathing lounge, because it can be wheeled with ease from place to place. The lounge is finished with long cushions covered in chintz or flower-patterned printed linens.

SPORTS GLOVES

Sports gloves this season are being cut quite short at the wrist —so much more practical than the long gauntlet, or a fancy top kind. Belts are important and must be worn in the right place.

CONSTIPATION SUFFERERS
Heed This Warning.

Constipation is dangerous, and in the summer months more than ordinary care should be taken to keep intestinal activity regular for dysentery, typhoid and similar illnesses are then most prevalent.

An occasional dose of Pinkettes ensures regularity of the daily habit. These tiny laxative pilules act in a mild way and at the same time provide a perfect cleansing for the intestines, keeping the stomach and bowels free from any accumulation of waste matter which is one of the main causes of ill-health. Pinkettes are a perfectly safe vegetable laxative. They are invaluable in cases of constipation, liverishness, biliousness, indigestion, sick headache, and help to remove pimples, boils and other affections of the skin. Call at a chemist's to-day and get some Pinkettes. No household should be without this ideal laxative.

BRIDGE NOTES

THE VIENNA COUP.

by Ely Culbertson.

The Vienna Coup is a variation of the squeeze play which begins with the establishment of a high card or cards for an opponent, and later, through the operation of the squeeze, forces him to discard them.

An example of the Vienna Coup is:

North:—
S.—A 5
H.—A Q 10
D.—10 7 4
C.—A K Q 8 7

West:—
S.—10 9 2

D.——
C.—J 10 9 5 2

South:—
S.—J 8 6 4
H.—K 5 2
D.—A K Q J 9
C.—4

South is playing a contract of seven diamonds and thus cannot lose any tricks. West's opening lead is the heart 8, and when the Dummy is spread on the table, the Declarer counts his tricks preparatory to the play. He can see as certain winners five tricks in diamonds, three hearts, three clubs and one spade—a total of 12 tricks.

It is possible that the thirteenth trick may be established by ruffing a club in his own hand and establishing the thirteenth club in Dummy. This plan would be effective if the clubs adversely held were divided 4-3.

The heart is won with the Ace in Dummy. However, the first lead of trumps discloses that West holds all five trumps and therefore no trumps in the closed hand can be used in an effort to establish a low club in the Dummy by ruffing one round of that suit.

There remains yet one chance of making the contract which will prove effective if East holds four clubs and also both the King and Queen of spades. It is a long chance, but East must make four more discards and no other plan offers any hope of success. At trick 3, Declarer leads the Ace of spades, thus establishing not one but two high spades for East.

He follows with four diamond leads and one round of hearts. The cards are now located at follows:

South now leads the heart King, and from Dummy discards the club 7. Whatever card East plays must result in South winning all the remaining tricks. If he discards one more club, all Dummy's clubs are good. If he discards the spade King, South will take a trick with the spade Knave and win the last 3 tricks with the Ace—Any.

This hand could not have been made had the Declarer not played the spade Ace early in the hand. If the Ace of spades had been retained in Dummy, East, discarding after the Dummy, would have been permitted liberty of action and must have defeated the ambitious contract. After seven rounds, the following cards would have remained.

North:—
S.—A 5
H.——
D.——
C.—A K Q 8

West:—
S.—10 9 2
H.—8
D.——
C.—6 3

East:—
S.—K Q
H.——
D.——
C.—J 10 9 5

South:—
S.—J 8 6 4
H.—K
D.——
C.—4

In this situation, when South leads the heart King and discards the spade 5 in Dummy, East will also throw a spade, and must therefore win the last trick in clubs.

The Loch Ness monster of Scotland had its counterpart at Old Point Comfort Beach, Va., but there's no mystery about it now. This huge sea serpent got a shrieking thrill out of vacationists when it reared its head out of the water. It was only a joke, however, perpetrated by Mrs. Richard Bonn and Mrs. John Miles Lewis. They are shown preparing the wooden monster for another fearsome appearance.

GREATEST FLIGHT IN HISTORY

"The poor chaps were becoming easier to settle in the machine because I had more time to talk to them and explain that it was not dangerous.

"The little machine was behaving perfectly. But the ice-floe was moving all the time.

Shrinking Aerodrome

"Our little aerodrome had got a bit smaller since the first time I had landed on it, and getting down and up was a bit ticklish. Little bumps of snow and ice helped here and there, and the strong winds made it easier.

"The next day again I was unlucky. I only got one bunch off the ice-floe. The weather was diabolical, and the compass was crazy.

"If you took these plucky people off you had to be as sure as possible that you could land them. There was nowhere over the icebergs in between Vankarem and the floe where you could land, and it would not have quite fair to take them from the temporary safety of the floe and crash with them in the icebergs."

Finest Man

Again he smiled and attended to the creases.

"Don't try to make a hero of me. Levanesky, my colleague, was doing much the same as I was. It was all you would do.

"On the fourth day I got the last survivors off. I had carried thirty-nine of them to Vankarem in exactly nine trips." He laughed.

"The last trip was as hard as the first. "I've never known such weather and such a course to fly over. Only a sea-gull could navigate in that place."

"What did you learn in those nine trips?" I asked him.

He smiled and looked at me with a world of humour in his masterful eyes.

"I learnt a lot about ice-floes; how plucky inexperienced men can be in the air; and the little advantages of an air-cooled engine when the thermometer is thirty-odd below zero.

"I'm not really a technical man." suit.

Craigengower Hopes Receive Check

Bowling Green Twelve Tea Better

GAME IN BALANCE UNTIL INTERVAL

(By SHORT HEAD)

WHATEVER hope Craigengower "A" had of seeing their clubmates lower the champions' colours were rudely shattered last Saturday, when Craigengower "B" were defeated by 19 shots at home.

The Bowling Green Club played a steady game throughout, and fully deserved their win. A feature of the game was J. Cavanaghs' rink's (E. Tuck, L. C. R. Souza and A. S. Gomes) win over W. Macfarlane's four (P. Farrell, J. Rodger and H. Rose), the C.C.C. skip winning by 11 shots.

Although the champions won by a fairly comfortable margin, until late in the game Craigengower had a chance of victory. E. Arculli went down badly to L. Guy, but W. Macfarlane was receiving similar treatment from J. Cavanagh, and C. Rosselett and R. Hall were fairly even. On the 13th head, the champions were leading by four shots only.

After the tea interval, however, the visitors forged ahead on two greens to win comfortably.

The greens were inclined to play tricks, especially on the long heads, and on two greens the champions favoured the short head in consequence. Macfarlane's rink would have done better had they kept to the short heads instead of full, for the condition of the green was not conducive to accurate bowling on the long heads.

The enforced lack of practice, due to the rains, was manifest on the first few heads on each green, but the champions were the quicker to adapt themselves to the prevailing conditions.

Most of the Craigengower "A" [illegible] were subjected to frequent inspection.

Guy's Early Lead

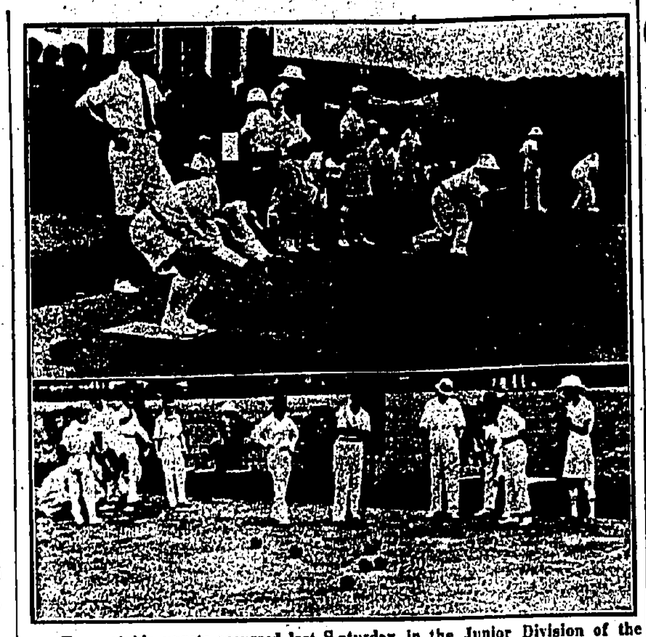
L. Guy's rink (J. Watson, A. S. Russell and J. H. Budding) was away to an early lead with a four on the first head, but E. Arculli's rink (A. E. Marchant, H. Milton and W. Gill) took the lead on the 5th with a similar score, for the first and last time during the game, for Guy scored on 11 of the remaining 16 heads, to win by 17 shots.

C. S. Rosselett, who was defeated by R. Hall to the tune of 13 shots, at one time held a comfortable lead of 8 shots—on the 7th head—but, by employing wrong tactics, allowed Hall to overtake him.

On the 8th head, Hall had a lie of 4 shots. The head was quite open, and Rosselett could have relieved an awkward situation by a steady draw, but instead, attempted to drive the jack through to his back woods. His effort was too narrow, and Hall drew another shot to take five.

R. Hall then went on to register on 11 of the remaining 13 heads to gain a meritorious victory by 13 shots. Duncan played well at No. 1 for the losers, and more often than not had his namesake beaten for the shot.

On the remaining green, J. Cavanagh defeated W. MacFarlane by 11 shots. The visitors could not get the measure of the green, and with the home rink favouring the full head, they never really settled down. E. Tuck, at No. 1, and J. Cavanagh, skip, played well for the winners on this rink.



Two notable upsets occurred last Saturday in the Junior Division of the Lawn Bowls League. The top picture shows a glimpse of the game in which the Kowloon C.C. defeated the Club de Recreio at King's Park by 70 shots to 63, while in the lower picture the Police R.C. are seen defeating the Indian R.C. leaders of the Junior Division. The Indians were beaten after nine successive wins this season. —(King's Studio).

CANDIDATES FOR INTERPORT RECOGNITION

HIGH STANDARD SET THIS SEASON

SUGGESTED RINK

Club entries for the Colony's Interport Lawn Bowls team to visit Shanghai next month, close this evening. has been exceptionally high and it is confidently thought that the Colony is capable of fielding a team which can more than hold their own against Shanghai.

Without the names of club bowlers who have been entered by their clubs at hand, the following are a selection of players who have played well this season.

No. 1.—A. E. Coates (C.C.C.), G. L. Buchanan (C.C.C.), E. G. Post (Police), G. Perkins (Police), E. W. Simmonds (C.S.C.C.), T. Armstrong (C.S.C.C.), H. Gittins (K.C.C.) E. Heywood (K.C.C.), L. A. Gutierrez (Recreio), J. E. Noronha (Recreio).

No. 2.—R. F. Luz (C.C.C.), B. W. Bradbury (C.C.C.), F. J. Jones (C.S.C.C.) A. E. Clarke (Police), A. E. Carey (Police), and W. V. Field (C.C.C.).

No. 3.—R. P. Phillips (K.C.C.), G. Moss (Police), D. Rumjahn (C.C.C.), L. Guy (K.B.G.C.).

Possibly the strongest combination which could be picked from the above names would consist of —No. 1. R. F. Luz (C.C.C.), No. 2, F. J. Jones (C.S.C.C.) or B. W. Bradbury (C.C.C.), No. 3, A. W. Grimmitt (C.S.C.C.) and U. M. Omar (C.C.C.) skip.

CLUB SURPRISE KOWLOON

Pote-Hunt's Cool Display The Feature.

ABSENCE OF LEWIS FELT BY MAINLANDERS

The Hong Kong Cricket Club recorded a smart win yesterday when they entertained and beat the Kowloon Cricket Club by 5½ to 3½ sets.

The mainlanders, who completed their fixture card with a surprise defeat, have suffered three reverses this season, the other two being inflicted by the Chinese R. C. and the Recreio.

The absence of R. B. Lewis contributed in no small measure to the downfall of the K.C.C., though it must be mentioned that the Club pairs adapted themselves better to the heavy conditions under which the match was played.

The cool display of Pote-Hunt was the outstanding feature, though Gray and Oppenheim, after a shaky start, settled down to splendid play.

RECREIO WIN FINAL MATCH IN "B" DIVISION

ESTABLISH SECOND LEAGUE PLACE

INDIANS ROUTED AT KING'S PARK

The Club de Recreio won their last "B" Division Lawn Tennis League match yesterday afternoon, defeating the Indian Recreation Club at home by 7 sets to 2, to establish their position as runners-up to the Chinese Recreation Club in the Championship.

In a strong Recreio team, A. A. Remedios and W. A. Reed were the outstanding pair, securing victory by a large margin in each of their sets. Their stiffest tussle was against A. K. Suffiad and F. D. Pereira, whom they defeated 6-3.

Reed showed a great improvement on his display against the C.R.C., his work at the net at times being brilliant. Remedios, by steady play and deadly accuracy, again and again broke through the defence of the Indian pair.

Pereira Plays Well.

Pereira played a great game. His service had good length, while his backhand play has improved considerably since the beginning of the season, when he was suffering from a strained elbow.

He and Suffiad combined well, and were rarely out positioned.

This pair recorded the only Indian victory, and shared the honours in their last set.

In their opening set, against J. J. Remedios, the Recreio captain, and L. A. da Silva, they were definitely superior, the Recreio pair winning only two games.

Silva was again inclined to rely more on strength than accuracy for his winning shots.

His service, perhaps one of the fastest in the "B" Division, is almost untakable if accurate, but it is, more often than not, wide of the mark.

Remedios Stale

Remedios played a strong game, although he appeared to be a little stale, his play having lost some of the punch which has made him one of the most formidable members of the Recreio team.

D. M. A. Razack and A. R. Suffiad aquitted themselves well in their second set, holding Remedios and Silva to a draw, although in their final match, against Remedios and Reed, they failed to win a game.

H. A. Ribeiro and D. R. A. Rodrigues won two and drew one of their sets, but in their opening encounter, in which they beat M. O. Hoosen and M. R. Abbas, their game was uninspiring, the set providing less sparkle than their later displays.

Scores:

L. A. da Silva and J. J. Remedios (Recreio):—

GLAMORGAN BOWLERS MEET MASTER MIND

HIS HIGHEST SCORE IN ENGLAND.

WOOLLEY'S 100 CENTURIES

LONDON TO-DAY.

WALLY HAMMOND, THE GLOUCESTERSHIRE AND ALL-ENGLAND ALL-ROUNDER, YESTERDAY SCORED 302 NOT OUT IN THE COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP MATCH AGAINST GLAMORGAN AT BRISTOL, THUS RECORDING THE HIGHEST SCORE HE HAS EVER MADE IN ENGLAND, BEATING HIS 290 AGAINST KENT AT TUNBRIDGE WELLS ON JULY 4.

Hammond heads the first-class cricket batting averages with the remarkable figure of 93.09 runs in 24 innings, and requires only five runs to reach 2,000 runs for the present season. Jack O'Connor (Essex) is the only batsman to have passed the second thousand this season.

Freak Woolley, the Kent and all-England cricketer, was yesterday presented by the Kent County Cricket Club with £100 to commemorate the 100 centuries he has made for that County.—British Wireless Service.

AUSTRALIANS ARE SUBDUED

Stern Fight For Runs At Edgbaston.

CROOM AND SANTALL DEFY GRIMMETT'S WILES

London, To-day.

Runs were hard to make at Edgbaston yesterday, but at the close of play the Australians, with six wickets in hand, led Warwickshire by 177 runs.

The county's last seven wickets added 159 runs, mainly due to the splendid stand by Croom, who followed up his bowling feat by topping the half century, and Santall, who scored 61. The remaining batsmen provided Grimmett with easy victims.

With a lead of 42 on the first innings the tourists, aided by a bright stand between McCabe and Darling, totalled 135 for the loss of four wickets.

In all 294 runs were scored yesterday for the loss of eleven wickets.

Scores, as cabled by Reuter, were:

Australia: 221 (Paine 4 for 65, Croom 4 for 33).
135 for 4 (S. J. McCabe 77, L. Darling 50).
Warwick: 179 (Croom 51, Santall 61, C. V. Grimmett 5 for 76).

KENT BEAT NOTTS BY INNINGS.

Eastman 4 For 0 Against Somerset.

London, To-day.

Kent returned to their best form to beat Notts by an innings in two days at Canterbury, thus recording their tenth win in 24 matches, while Essex registered their eighth success in 25 games by beating the lowly-placed Somerset.

The feature of the Festival at Canterbury was Frank Woolley's 101, his eighth century of the season. Notts completely failed before the slow bowlers, Tich Freeman securing 5 for 62, and C. S. Marriott, the schoolmaster, 11 for 83.

Kenneth Farnes met with success against Somerset, but Eastman's 4 for no runs was the more impressive analysis.

Scores, as cabled by Reuter, were:

At Weston-super-Mare, Essex defeated Somerset by 10 wickets.
Somerset: 60 (K. Farnes 4 for 35, Eastman 4 for 0) and 111.
Essex: 128 (A. G. Hazell 7 for 77) and 46 for 0.

At Canterbury, Kent defeated Notts by an innings and 154 runs.
Kent: 445 for 6 dec. (Woolley 101).
Notts: 116 (Freeman 5 for 62, C. S. Marriott 4 for 27).
175 (Marriott 7 for 56).

PERRY TRIUMPHS IN TAME FINISH

CRAWFORD'S ABORTIVE RECOVERY

(By A. WALLIS MYERS)

LONDON, JULY 7.

YESTERDAY, AT WIMBLEDON, BEFORE AN EXPECTANT THRONG, HOPING, BUT NOT QUITE SURE UNTIL THE END, F. J. PERRY DEFEATED J. H. CRAWFORD, THE HOLDER, IN THE FINAL, AND BECAME THE FIRST HOME-GROWN CHAMPION SINCE 1909. THE SCORE WAS 6—3, 6—0, 7—5.

Thus Perry became the holder of a notable triple crown. He is champion of Wimbledon, Australia, and America.

The result was epoch-making; the actual match was not an epic fight. It was, indeed, a hollow victory, only saved from becoming a debacle by the Australia's plucky but fruitless effort to turn the tide in the third set.

Of Perry's fitness to hold the title by virtue of his play and resolution it gave open proof; as a spectacle and in relation to some much greater matches that had gone before this week it was almost an anti-climax.

For if the Perry enthroned yesterday was a better Perry than Wimbledon had ever seen—remorselessly accurate on the drive, very competent on the service, and brilliant on the few occasions when he ventured to the net—Crawford was certainly not the vibrant, resourceful, and calculating player who beat Vines in a classic match last year.

He only gave glimpses of the champion; for the rest he was like a man living under the shadow of defeat, his weapons blunted, his eye out of focus, and his enterprise gone.

The new champion is a native of Stockport. He is a Middlesex club player converted into a champion by his own volatile, sanguine character, by the confidence of his father, and by the facilities for "first ten" practice and experience all over the world provided by a discerning governing body.

Perry Sets Up Record.

Before Crawford's belated stand came the challenger had created a new record for any men's Wimbledon final.

He had won twelve games in succession—nominally two love sets. Such a break against a man of Crawford's class and experience suggests a brand of play unprecedented in its mastery and precision.

And such it was, even if allowance be made for Crawford's inadequate resistance and his extraordinary lack of initiative. The Australian had opened with a 3—1 lead. He had won the two first games with a rousing service, and had broken through Perry's service after a long dispute. Perry was love-40, caught up, and then served a double fault.

This lapse on Perry's part seemed to unlock the floodgates which the Englishman, anxious to be cool and calm, a had closed.

You could see the gleam of battle in his eye; he was energised for a forward movement; he had taken off the gloves.

On and on he went from this stage. Now the set at 6—3, next a love set, then the first game in the third set—a dozen games in a row. There was only one deuce game in the sequence, and very few rallies which did not reveal Perry as the master of his fate.

Crawford Stereotyped.

I confess that Crawford's tactics perplexed me. He seemed all the time to be playing into Perry's hands. His back hand returns were nearly all across the court, very rarely down the line.

By this almost stereotyped play, with never a threat of a volleying sortie, he polished up Perry's backhand so that it became brighter than Crawford's own.

It may be that Crawford was cramped by Perry's low trajectory and beautiful length; he had to take the line of least resistance.

But desperate straits call for desperate remedies. Crawford seemed almost resigned to going down in his own way, Perry imposing his will all the time.

In the third set there was a change, but Crawford only once forced a lead. Perry showed no serious decline; it was irrational for complete dominance to last for three sets.

Each man won his service up to 4—4; at last the crowd were applauding an issue really joined. There was, indeed, a great shout of sympathy when Crawford, now coming in, showed the magic of his cross volleys.

After he had won the ninth game, leading for the first time—Perry had served only his second double fault of the match to give him game point—the holder raised the waning hopes of his supporters. They thought of Crawford's great recovery against Shields; they could see that their man was not physically exhausted.

Tame Ending.

Perry's play in the next three games was worthy of the champion he was soon to be. He got a point from a double fault, but played the succeeding rallies with marvellous control, piloting Crawford from side to side until he got the opening or a sterling winner. He was tested overhead and found secure.

He held his service gallantly in the eleventh game, despite a double fault. He then saw Crawford go to forty-love; his best service was back again. Perry was undismayed. Errors were forced from a baulked opponent; four points were taken in a row. The crucial championship point had arrived.

The end was like a damp squib exploding. There was to be no final rally, no breathless suspense, no deafening clamour as Perry made the winning shot.

Crawford was foot-faulted at match point for putting his toe on the line on his first service; on his second, doubtless depressed at this unlucky stroke of fortune, he served a double.

It was a brave linesman who inflicted the penalty at this deathbed stage. The effect was to catch the gallery in a state of suspended animation. They almost caught their breath in sympathy before they gave the winner his well-merited ovation.

Drysdale Beats Crawford In Four Sets To Win K.C.C. Junior Title

M. Drysdale won the Kowloon Cricket Club Men's Junior Lawn Tennis Championship yesterday when he defeated A. Crawford 6—1, 6—2, 8—6, 6—2.

Although neither player was on the top of his form, good tennis was witnessed. Drysdale's driving was sound, but his over head play was decidedly weak, while Crawford frequently caught him out of position.

Crawford's back hand was very strong, while at the net his sparkling play gave him many points, although Drysdale's fore-hand shots often passed him.

The first two sets went to Drysdale without much opposition, but in the third Crawford settled down and punished his tiring opponent to win 6—3.

After a 10 minutes' rest Drysdale recovered to carry off the remaining set at 6—2, although had play been continued, immediately after the third set had concluded, a different result might have been witnessed. Drysdale was then showing definite signs of tiring, while Crawford appeared to have found his length and was in a winning mood.

COLONY RECORD

ROZA PEREIRA SHATTERS MARK BY A SECOND

100 YARDS BACK STROKE

Interport Swimming Trials

(By G. L.)

A Colony swimming record for the 100 yards back-stroke was set up at the first of the Interport trials held at the V.R.C. last evening in preparation for the forthcoming Swimming Interport at Shanghai in September.

Lionel Roza-Pereira, (V.R.C.) the Colony's long distance champion, won the event in 70 1/5 seconds to smash Wong Siong Hing's six-year-old record of 71 2/5 seconds. W. Lawrence, (V.R.C.) the 100 yards free style champion, who was beaten by a touch after a thrilling duel, also bettered the old record mark, his time being 70 3/5 seconds.

T. L. Paget (V.R.C.) provided a surprise with a runaway victory in the 50 yards free style, outclassing the Colony's fastest in a well swum race. E. B. da Roza (V.R.C.), who won the championship for this distance last year, was a poor third.

The Chinese offered stern resistance in the 100 Yards breast-stroke event, two of their competitors challenging the V.R.C. entrants, E. M. Marques and B. Gosano over the whole distance.

Soon Too Shun (Chinese Civil Servants Club) led the whole way, and only by a supreme effort did Marques draw level in the last few yards to force a dead heat.

B. Gosano outdistanced the other Chinese competitor, Ng Choo Fay (C.A.A.), to take third place.

The winners' time was only mediocre, being 79 seconds.

FANCY DIVING

The diving trials were well supported, but the outside competitors were at a disadvantage through not being accustomed to the "spring" of the V.R.C. board.

Edward Roza, for six years diving champion of the Colony, was, however, much superior, and in a class of his own.

The diving trials will be continued on August 14, and 16 when further swimming events will take place.

A water-polo match between picked teams to judge the standard of play provided the remaining item on the programme.

The results were as follow:

100 Yards Back Stroke:—
1. L. Roza-Pereira (V.R.C.) Time: 70 1/5 secs. (local record).
2. W. Lawrence (V.R.C.) Time: 70 3/5 secs.
3. Lau Po Hay (C.A.A.)
Also swam,—Lee Yiu Cheuk (C.C.S.C.)

100 Yards Breast Stroke:—
1. E. M. Marques (V.R.C.) Soon Foo Shun (C.C.S.C.) Time: 79 secs.
2. B. Gosano (V.R.C.) Time: 82 3/5 secs.
Also swam—Ng Shiu Fay and O. Lopes (V.R.C.)

50 Yards Free Style:—
1. T. L. Paget (V.R.C.) Time: 26 secs.
2. H. L. Ozorio (V.R.C.) Time: 27 1/5 secs.
3. E. B. Roza (V.R.C.) Time: 28 1/5 secs.
Also swam—Lau Po Hay (C.A.A.)

Diving.—Entrants—Edward Roza (V.R.C.), Kwok Chee Siu (unattached), W. S. Bunny (unattached), Chang Ping Yung (C.C.S.C.), Wong Sik Hong (C.A.A.) and W. R. Tait (R.A.F.)

STOCK EXCHANGE CONTROL

First Step To Be Taken On Monday.

REPRESENTATIVES APPOINTED

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.
(By Telegraph, Copyright, Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1894. Received August 10, 2.01 a.m.)

Washington, To-day.

The Chairman of the Stock Exchange Control Commission, Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy has announced that he is sending registration blanks for the stock exchanges, beginning on Monday, as the first step in the Government's stock market control programme.

Mr. Kennedy said that the Commission was completing temporary rules for the registration of securities already listed on the stock exchanges, which will be effective until July 1, 1935. New Listings, however, come under the permanent regulations.

Preventing Injustices.

He said that the Commission had conferred representatives in Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago and New York Stock exchanges in order to prevent injustices in connection with the new licensing and securities requirements.

Representatives had informed him that the Commission's ideas were fair.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

COTTON CONTROL MAY GO

If American Farmers Wish To Export

CARRY-OVER NEAR NORMAL

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.
(By Telegraph, Copyright, Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1894. Received August 10, 9.04 a.m.)

Washington, To-day.

After conferring with Agriculture Department officials yesterday, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Henry C. Wallace, said that the Government control over cotton may be relaxed in the new year, due to reduced production.

It is estimated that the carry-over next year will be reduced to approximately normal.

Mr. Wallace said that the problem is whether to produce enough to enable the United States to export her customary 8,000,000 bales or to retire permanently from world trade and produce only domestic consumption.

EXPORT QUESTION.

The normal American consumption is about 14,800,000 bales, of which 8,000,000 bales are usually exported.

It is indicated that if the farmers wish to maintain their share in the world markets in 1935, the Government curb on production would be relaxed.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

MORGENTHAU'S ORDER

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.
(By Telegraph, Copyright, Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1894. Received August 10, 9.04 a.m.)

Washington, To-day.

The United States Treasury Secretary, Mr. Henry Morgenthau has issued an order requiring Consular invoices on all silver shipments into the United States exceeding U.S.$100, but exempting silver at present in transit, silver imported for re-export, and crude silver. It is said that the purpose is to provide a check on the amount of imports.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

BETTER TONE ON WALL STRREET

Commodities Continue To Soar.

BOND MARKET WEAKER

New York, To-day.

A sharp advance in prices featured Wall Street yesterday. Industrials and rails were up 2.37 and .72 to 91.34 and 34.65, respectively, while utilities advanced .59 to 20.69. Bonds were off .36 to 92.81.

The commodity index soared 1.26 to a new 1933-34 high mark of 65.25.

S. E. Levy And Company's Report

In their market report, Messrs. S. E. Levy and Company, correspondents for Messrs. White, Weld and Company, New York state:

"Stocks: Continuing agitation for further inflation is already reflected in declining bond prices, the weakness of the Dollar and the strength of commodities. Metal stocks received unexpected encouragement from the Government move nationalising silver. Whether the Government moves towards further inflation or again exercises restraint in order to accomplish the large impending borrowings cannot be promptly forecast. We anticipate further strength to-morrow, followed by profit-taking. Business done: —1,420,000 shares.

"Bonds: High-grade issues were unsteady, while second-grades were erratic.

"Cotton: The cotton market was strong on trade buying, prompted by the extreme dry heat in the South-West. Prices should work higher, unless Southern offerings increase sharply.

"Silver: Trading has been indefinitely suspended and we are ceasing to express any opinions. Business done: 181 contracts.

"Rubber: Prices are strong. The announcement of the nationalisation of silver stimulated business in all commodities, but more especially in rubber. We have been confidentially and directly informed that one of the biggest interests in the Trade is not following the advance and is inclined to start taking profits on the scale up. Business done: 1,110 lots.

"Wheat: Prices are higher. The Government wheat report is expected to show but little change from recent private reports, but the weather in the corn-belt has lately been most unfavourable. Purchases are suggested on any set-backs. Wednesday's sales:—55,529,000 bushels." —Reuter.

Night Telegram

The following messages were received in the night:

Received through Reuter: "In the West half of the cotton belt, in the South-West part of the grain belt and in a great bulk of the Middle West, the heat is fiery and the temperatures are all above the 100's. The following temperatures have been registered:—Omaha 110, Kansas City 108, Columbia (Mo.) 108, Ottumwa (Iowa) 114. The torridity is intensifying towards the North-East. In the Far West conditions are cooler, while the weather in Canada is clear and cool."

Received through United Press: "The American Treasury has nationalised silver at 50.01 cents per ounce. The rise in the price of London silver is attributed to strong American buying."

The following telegrams from New York, cabled by Reuter, were received last night:—

Favourable factors before the opening of the market were:—

STEEL OUTPUT LOWER

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.
(By Telegraph, Copyright, Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1894, Received August 10, 9.04 a.m.)

New York, To-day.

The journal "Iron Age" estimates American production at 27.5 per cent. of capacity due to a pick up in tin plate demand for cans to preserve the meat of 7,000,000 cattle which the Government is slaughtering in connection with the drought relief, otherwise, the outlook is very drab. Little tonnage for other uses is anticipated before September.

The Steel Institute has estimated the July steel ingot production in the United States at 1,472,584 gross tons, the smallest output since April, 1933, and compared with 3,015,972 tons in June and 3,168,354 last July. It estimates capacity at 26.75 per cent., as compared with 52.68 per cent. in June and 58.30 last July.

Seven months output was 17,653,473 tons, as compared with 12,042,742 tons in the corresponding period of last year.

Dow Jones predicts that the United States steelcorp's July shipments, to be published to-morrow, are substantially below June.—United Press per S. E. Levy and Company.

GEORGE ARLISS TO PLAY DUKE OF WELLINGTON

HIS FIRST BRITISH CONTRACT.

MAE WEST LURING EX-KING ALFONSO TO STUDIO

GEORGE Arliss is to play the first Duke of Wellington in his first British film for the Gaumont-British Corporation. The particular part of Wellington's career chosen for the film is from the escape of Napoleon from Elba until the Second Treaty of Paris. Special features will be made of the Duchess of Richmond's Ball on the eve of Waterloo, but there are to be no spectacular battle scenes.

Arliss prefers historical to fictional characters, as they provide him with greater opportunities for subtle acting.

Mae West And Alfonso

Mae West, famous for her work in "I'm No Angel" and "She Done Him Wrong", is already to film "Me and the King", written especially for her, following the news that ex-king Alfonso of Spain was interested in her studio. Alfonso has made no definite move yet, but Prince Alexis Thurntaxis has been busy on the type-writer.

Her film "It Ain't No Sin" has been banned by the New York State Board of Regents, the film censoring body. The film is now being re-done with the alteration of many scenes and dialogue, and it was indicated also that the title, which is based on sex appeal, would be changed.

May Robson's Versatility

"Lady For A Day" was excellent entertainment at the King's Theatre in the early part of the week. How many knew that that amazingly versatile actress May Robson was a sheriff. As Apple Annie she was superb, giving a performance worthy of consideration for the 1934 statuette for the best actress in Hollywood. It will please many to know that Warren William (The Dupe) is coming shortly as Philo Vance in "The Dragon Murder Case", and in "The Case of the Howling Dog." I wonder how many among the packed houses realised that they were seeing in "Lady for a Day" the ranking fourth best film of 1933.

NOVELTY THRILLER REACHES PEDESTAL OF PERFECTION

CLARK GABLE AND MYRNA LOY GIVE BEST IN "MANHATTAN MELODRAMA"

DIANE'S EXCLUSIVE TALKIE TALKS SERIES

"THE Invisible Man" is a thriller you won't want to miss, and as such it lives up to the splendid advertising that is given it. James "Journey's End" Whale, (who directed Frankenstein") took on the biggest task, yet the most fascinating, he has ever tackled. To direct a film, where the principal character spends a considerable time on the screen, yet remains completely invisible, needed all one's ingenuity.

Twelve scenario writers tried to do credit to Wells' great novel, but none were satisfactory, nor horrifying enough. Whale wrote in desperation to his old colleague, the man who wrote "Journey's End"—R. C. Sheriff— telling his own ideas of how he would treat the story, and Sheriff sent back perfect screen material, yet keeping close to the original. The author fully approved of the love interest they introduced.

It is interesting to note that it took six months of experimenting with cameras and mechanical devices, before the directors and technical men were satisfied.

Claud Rains, the star-stood in front of the camera, and acted, but no photographs were made of him. Trick photography, wires like those used in the marionette shows, and conjuror's tricks were all used when objects were held by the man, or when lighting a cigarette and other actions. It gives such an uncanny feeling when you see him move a chair and sit down. His presence is felt, yet he remains invisible. The most difficult part was to photograph his light running steps in the snow. Artificial snow in hundreds of tons was carted to a hill outside Hollywood, and that final scene is amazingly well done.

To tell a studio secret, the camera men who worked in two hours stretches, with tiny brushes manipulated through microscopes, adding touches to thousand of feet of film, and eliminating the scenes the camera had been forced to "take", was the finest accomplishment of all.

BID FOR WORLD POWER.

In the story—a young scientist, experimenting with a formula for invisibility, finds what he seeks, but cannot return to his normal form. His brain is unhinged and he becomes a menace. He is visible when clothed, his head bandaged and gloves on his hands.

I confess to a sickening feeling when, trapped by the police in his room in the Inn, which he refuses to vacate, he tells them, in a spine chilling voice, that he can fool them, and unwinds the bandages to reveal—nothing. That was a moment when I did feel like rising from my seat.

From that moment the hunt starts. I won't tell you more, except that he terrorises his friend into promising to be his visible partner, in a fantastic scheme to make capital on his discovery, and assume world power. His capture is inevitable, but the progress onward is a succession of thrills. Not for one moment does the interest slacken, and the final scene is not easily forgotten.

Claud Rains, a recruit from the English stage, is called upon to enact a most difficult role, in this, his first picture. His features are seen only for one brief moment, at the end, and he has to depend on his voice to express all his emotions.

I think he gives a masterly performance of dramatic elocution.

Gloria Stuart, as the girl who loves him, is not given much chance to express anything else but fear, but she makes a lovely and appealing heroine. Una O'Connor and Merle Tottenham, remembered in "Cavalcade", Forrester Harvey, William Harrigan, (as the unwilling accomplice), Henry Travers, and many others, do extremely well in the minor characters. The English atmosphere is well maintained throughout, and only the screen could do justice to this fantasy by England's greatest author. Tragedy, novelty, humour, and thrills are skilfully blended to ensure a perfect evening's entertainment. Personal recommendation. Not to be missed.—(King's).

At The Queen's

PAT PATERSON

"Above The Clouds"

"ABOVE the Clouds" is a picture with plenty of action, and a climax in which a dirigible cracks in mid-air. Richard Cromwell acts the role of the discredited news-reel cameraman, who is vindicated in the end and wins the girl—Dorothy Wilson. Robert Armstrong, Dick's superior, takes all the credit for good work, till the day of reckoning. Many fine shots of actual news-reel topics, and the dare-devil gallantry of these intrepid men, enliven the film, and make it worth seeing.—(Queen's).

"SLEEPING Car" is the kind of daring picture that needs the subtle touch of Ernest Lubitsch to put over properly. We have already had the pleasure of seeing the female star—Madeleine Carroll in her best role to date—"I Was a Spy," and it must be confessed in this British release, wherein Ivor Novello is co-starred, that she is not seen to the greatest advantage. More of this later. Due shortly at the Queen's.

"Beloved"

"BELOVED" is a picture that carries a man's life, love, and career. It is history seen from one man's viewpoint, and John Boles, dominating the performance, gives a charming character study of the hero musician, from his early days to his death.

In the role of composer, Boles is given a chance to sing a few choice songs. The music is hauntingly beautiful and was written by the Director—Victor Schertzinger. His "American Symphony" is, specially a lovely piece.

The plot rather reminds me of "Viennese Nights", when the man is forced through poverty to play music he detests. He lives to scorn his grandson's modern musical triumph, and reaps his own reward in his life's great work.

Gloria Stuart is perfectly cast as the wife who shares his sorrows. I will always regret that this accomplished actress was not given the role, promised by Universal, that of the girl in "Only Yesterday." I liked her work in "The Kiss before the Mirror", "The Girl in Room 419," and now the two pictures at the King's.

Yet, so far, she has not been given the chances her undoubted talent and beauty deserves, and it is no wonder she threatens to return to her journalistic work in Shanghai or go on the New York stage.

Others in the cast, Dorothy Peterson, Eddie Woods and Morgan Farley aided by lovely settings and haunting music make this a film worth seeing.—(King's).

Variety Programme

A RADIO variety programme is promised at the Majestic, wherein some old features of Charlie Chaplin, Wheeler and Woolsey, will be the attraction. Phil Harris the Orchestra and Radio "Crooner" in the "short" that was awarded the highest honours recently by the Motion Picture Academy—"So this is Harris" is also included in the programme.

"Three On A Honeymoon"

THIS is followed by a delightful little play "Three on a Honeymoon." Adorable Sally Eilers, Charles Starrett, Henrietta Crossmann, and Zazu Pitts. Recommended.

"The Animal Kingdom"

THEN comes a drama, starring Leslie Howard and Anne Harding, but sharing the acting honours with Myrna Loy and William Gargan, namely — "The Animal Kingdom." The sort of sex play that the Decency League, so strong in the States, will not allow to be shown now. Anne Harding and William Gargan stole the acting honours as far as I was concerned, but then I am not among the myriads of admirers of Leslie Howard, and I consider that Myrna Loy has risen to greater heights since this was made. All due at the Majestic.

The sustained strength of Commodities. It is thought that pessimism recently has been over-done and the market shows signs of being in an over-sold condition.

The recent rise in Grain and Cotton prices and the persistence of the drought in the United States is greatly aiding countries like Australia, Argentina, Canada and India, which may possibly result in increased imports of manufactured goods. India recently has been buying silver and if Grain, Cotton and Jute prices are strong, this factor coupled with the American silver policy, is likely to substantially raise the silver price over a period, although the American Treasury is the dominant influence. In general, the rise in commodity prices, due to direct and indirect consequences of the drought, may somewhat be off-set by deflationary tendencies.

The Shipping Subsidy.

The Government plan for aiding British shipping is in substance simple enough. The proposal is that a sum not exceeding £2,000,000, and limited to one year, should be used to enable the British tramp steamers to meet the unfair competition that threatens their early extinction. All other suggested remedies have, for the time being, been put aside. They are not abandoned. Although the shipowners have manifested no love for the "scrap and rebuild" plan, the Government remains of opinion that it would be useful, and is still prepared to co-operate with owners in replacing the older vessels. The Government, in addition, pledges itself to communicate further with other maritime countries regarding measures to reduce or abolish subsidies and scrap superfluous tonnage. In view of the breakdown of the negotiations in the League of Nations Committee on subsidies no Ministry can venture on that species of investigation with hope. Past experience has convinced us that if British shipping is not to be destroyed subsidies must be fought by subsidies.

Such a solution is not ideal, but no plan could be ideal, having regard to the circumstances in which shipping has been placed by the world increase in tonnage, the decline in cargoes, and the determination of other countries to keep ships at sea whatever the cost. The burden of discovering how best the British subsidy can be utilised is thrown on the shipping industry itself. The preparation of an agreed arrangement can be no easy matter, having regard to the diverse interests represented in ship-owning. Two principles are laid down as a guide for the application of the subsidy. The first is that it should not encourage competition among British shipowners, and the second that it shall secure greater employment of British shipping at the expense of foreign subsidised shipping. Both postulates are sound, but it is left for the shipowners themselves to formulate the means by which these results can be secured. At the same time they are enjoined to push forward negotiations with foreign interests that will help an agreement for the reduction of subsidies. Even the first of these matters must occupy several months of time, and will entail a race between a further collapse of British shipping and the administration of the tonic that it needs.

One thing is plain. When this work has been done no subsidy can be limited to the year, or less. The Government will have armed itself with a bargaining weapon in showing that it is resolved to meet subsidy by subsidy and has no intention of seeing British ships and British sailors reduced to idleness. That policy cannot have full effect in twelve months, and the Government will enormously strengthen its hands in negotiation if it announces, at the beginning, that help will be given so long as it is necessary to counter unfair conditions. Shipping must have breathing time in which to reorganise itself and consider its future problems without the fear that its plans may be upset by a sudden withdrawal of help. At the same time the shipping interests are doing all that is posible to lift themselves out of their difficulties. There is not the smallest fear that any help given will deter the industry from those "greater efforts" in other directions for which the Government asks.

HERE, THERE and EVERYWHERE

WHERE THE DOLLAR CAME FROM

It was from the pitch-blende of St. Joachimsthal that Mme. Curie and her husband made their famous discovery of radium in 1898.

St. Joachimsthal, a little mountain township near to Karlsbad, in Czechoslovakia, is still the largest radium mine in Europe.

The place has a curious history. In the sixteenth century it was the scene of a mining rush comparable with the Klondyke Trail of '98.

Miners flocked from all parts of Europe to exploit the discovery of the largest silver mine the world had ever known.

In time the mine petered out, and the big town which had sprung up declined.

The coins struck from the silver were called thalers. In the course of etymological evolution the word thaler became the modern dollar.

PROFESSOR, GENERAL, SPY.

With the discovery of radium the fame, if not the fortune, of St. Joachimsthal revived. It became a well-known spa for gouty and rheumatic patients.

An English company built a huge hotel with radium baths on its pine-covered slopes.

Just after the war another English company acquired the sole concession from the Czechoslovak Government for the sale of the radium.

The technical adviser was Professor Soddy. The promoters were General Louis Spears, M.P., and Sidney Reilly the famous secret agent whose Russian adventures form a branch of political folk-lore in themselves.

The venture never prospered. The radium was too expensive.

With the discovery of a more cheaply produced radium in the Congo the concession was given back to the Czechoslovak Government.

The hotel is now in Czech hands.

Private McGee drew himself up stiffly and saluted as he replied. "The dirthiest regiment I've iver inspected, sorr!"

GREATEST FLIGHT IN HISTORY

EPIC RESCUE FROM FLOATING ICE

MOLOKOO TELLS HIS STORY

(By Patrick Murphy.)

London.

VASSILI Sergevitch Molokov is in London. Most people in London are unaware of it. Yet the story of Molokov is one that our grandchildren will remember when the flight of Lindbergh is almost forgotten.

Early in March of this year there were ninety-four Russian people stranded on an ice-floe to the north of the Behring Strait, in the Arctic Ocean. They were survivors of the Soviet ship Chelyushin, which had been smashed by the ice.

Their leader, Professor Schmidt, was able to communicate by wireless with Russia. In classic messages he asked for help.

Rescue Plans

Then one day the despairing eyes of the ninety-four chanced to look up into the grey, cold sky.

Over the ice there echoed the roar of an airplane. Molokov had come.

He had flown through blizzards and fogs from Vankarem, a base on the Siberian coast over 100 miles away.

He circled round over the great prongs of ice which thrust their spear-points up above the ice-floe, trying to find a place to land. In the biggest area he could find free from obstruction he landed.

He stepped out of his machine and walked over to the little group of men. He brought them food. Then he told them he was going to try to rescue them by flying them six by six to the mainland.

For forty minutes he told them just what he proposed to do and what they should do to help them.

Molokov was a pilot in the Soviet Marine air force, working hundreds of miles away from this Arctic spot. He had heard on the wireless of their plight and he had volunteered to bring his machine and try to rescue the marooned men.

Epic Story

His little machine had been dismantled and brought 2,000 bilometres to Vankarem. This was his first rescue flight.

Tremendously conscious of the razorlike creases in the new grey suit he had brought in London, Molokov told me his epic story with the simplicity of a boy describing the curriculum at his school.

"There were lots of little difficulties," he said, uncrossing his long legs so that the creases should not suffer. His pale blue eyes, as clear as crystal, smiled at me.

"My machine, you see, was only a little one. It had really only room for my mechanic and myself.

"But after I had seen those fellows on the ice, the condition they were in, the danger of their ice-floe breaking up, I knew we had to hurry.

"So we made the cockpit which normally held the mechanic as big as we could. Then there are two slots in the underpart of the wings in which two parachutes are kept. These we were determined to use as cabins!" He smiled.

"I had only one engine, and it was water-cooled. That was regrettable. There was plenty of water about us, but the temperature was mostly 35 below zero.

"The weather was . . . well, just awful.

"I squeezed four of the smaller men into the cockpit. Then I got two of them to crawl into these sort of cigar-shaped slots in the wings. When they had got in as far as they could we pushed them the rest of the way and tied them in so that they would be safe.

"Then we tore away a bit of the canvas over their heads and made a few holes beneath them so that they could breathe and even see where we were going. You see, when a man sees what is happening he isn't so liable to be afraid."

He stood up and settled the legs of those trim new trousers. Then he sat down again.

Centre Of Gravity Out

"All this crowd, naturally, put the little machine completely out of balance. My centre of gravity was all over the place.

"The space in which I had to get up was about 120 yards instead of about 600; but . . ." he smiled and passed his strong, tanned hand over his firm chin—"but it was one of those cases when you have just got to make the little machine do what it is told.

"It was a bit of a trial, that first take-off.

"I boiled the water twice before putting it into the radiator, first to warm the radiator and then to warm the engine. I boiled the oil twice, too, to get the engine as warm as possible.

"Then I told the "passengers" not to be worried, and I started off. We skidded all over the little aerodrome, using every inch of distance possible, and finally was came 'unstuck." After that it was just a matter of flying straight.

Hopeless Fog

"The weather made it a bit hard and navigation was difficult. But we got to Vankarem.

"The next day was March 8. I think. I set out again from Vankarem. For fifty kilometres it was cold and clear. Then I ran into a hopeless bank of fog. I could see nothing. Then it became clear again.

"A bit further on the fog, or sea mist I suppose you would call it, rolled over me again. I looked at my compass. It was quite undecided where the north might be. It was jazzing about. We were so near the magnetic Pole.

"There was no horizon. When I ran into a good patch of weather again the snow and the ice and the clouds seemed all one. It was impossible to tell the clouds from the snow below."

His Lucky Day

He looked down at the flawless trousers, which were just beginning to crease behind the knees a little. Then his clear eyes looked up at me again and his mouth was hard.

"I had to go back."

He was silent for a moment.

"There are some things you cannot fight. That weather was invincible.

"But those people had to be rescued. The next day I set out early. We had been careful in filling the petrol tanks. The water in the petrol froze easily, so it was not hard to separate it from the spirit when pouring it it.

"March 9 was my lucky day.

"I flew those 200 miles there and back to the ice-floe four times in that day, and I brought six passengers each time.

"The marooned men lay down on the ice in the shape of a T. so that I would sight them better from the air.

Market Forecast

A forecast from London on the probable trend of the New York markets states:—

Owing to inflationist theory, coupled with the fact that stocks have not yet reflected the strength of commodities, we expect Wall Street to open firmer.

On the commodity markets, higher wheat prices are anticipated; erratic movements in the cottop market are anticipated, but we expect ultimately higher prices.

The rubber market is expected to open quiet.

ANTICIPATED CHANGES IN THE REICH CABINET

SILVER SPECULATORS DRIVEN OUT

LEGITIMATE BROKERS CAN CARRY ON

MILD INFLATION SEEN

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.

(By Telegraph, Copyright, Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1894, Received August 10, 9.14 a.m.)

WASHINGTON, TO-DAY.

THE TREASURY HAS ANNOUNCED THAT THE 50 PER CENT. TAX PROFITS ON SILVER TRANSACTIONS IS INAPPLICABLE TO METAL TURNED OVER TO THE MINT.

Mr. Morgenthau said that the Treasury would issue new currency on a cost basis against silver acquired via nationalisation which he termed "the rehabilitation of silver."

HE EXPLAINED THAT HE MEANT TO ISSUE U.S.$100,000,000 WORTH OF NEW SILVER NOTES IF THE 200,000,000 AVAILABLE OUNCES WERE SEIZED AT 50.01 CENTS PER OUNCE. ALTHOUGH FOREIGN SILVER WAS FREE FROM NATIONALISATION AND THEREFORE ENJOYS A FREE MARKET IN THE UNITED STATES. SUCH A STEP COULD BE TAKEN LATER IF NECESSARY, HE SAID.

Mr. Morgenthau said that he believed that legitimate silver brokers would be able to continue their activities, despite nationalisation, but speculators would undoubtedly be driven out.

Asked if he planned further silver changes he replied:

"The Treasury still finds its convenient to operate on a day to day basis."

Asked if the new currency foreshadowed inflation, he replied: "I would like to see a book written on 'What is Inflation':"

PROGRAMME ALL READY

It is learned that the nationalisation programme had been ready for several days, Mr. Morgenthau suddenly deciding to make it effective when silver touched 49.5 cents per ounce yesterday. He telephoned to President Roosevelt at Green Bay and the latter released the proclamation.

The Treasury said that rulings on the question of short sales and future trading would be forthcoming in a few days. Attention was called, however, to the fact that nationalisation was not effective for three months, therefore, speculators would be able to make necessary purchases.

SILVER TO BE COINED.

The proclamation orders that silver delivered to the mints shall be coined into standard dollars or otherwise added to the nation's monetary stocks. The monetary value of such delivered silver will be U.S.$1.29.20 per ounce.

The Treasury estimates that there is between 150,000,000 and 200,000,000 ounces of silver in the United States at present, of which 45,000,000 ounces is in recognised silver exchange depositories.

It is emphasised that newly-mined silver is exempt with the Treasury continuing to pay 64.5 cents per ounce.

CURRENCY SYSTEM

Financial circles attribute the move to an important step toward what President Roosevelt termed the organisation of a currency system that will be sound and adequate and which contemplates a large issuance of currency.

The nationalisation aims to prevent possible sales by domestic sources in foreign markets should prices exceed 50 cents per ounce, which would take the situation out of the Treasury's hands, as the Treasury is only empowered to pay 50 cents per ounce.

MOVE ACCLAIMED

Senator Thomas, of Oklahama, hailed the move as "very necessary to carry out the policy of Congress. He believes that it will have a far-reaching effect and be of vast assistance "in adjusting our monetary policy to regulate the dollar's buying power."

Senator Fletcher believes that nationalisation will cause a mild currency expansion. "I believe that the action is helpful and will result in increased prices of stocks and commodities," he declares.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

DEFLATIONARY EFFECT FEARED BY MANY.

He declared that the decision of the United States for the wider use of silver as money will cause other nations to adopt a similar policy to meet the 75-25 ratio set by Congress, he said.

He added that the order was a declaration that there was not enough gold in the world to satisfy its demands for money. It would return to silver.—Reuter.

No Immediate Effect In Nevada.

Reno, To-day.

The nationalisation of silver will not have any immediate effect on the Nevada silver-mining industry in the opinion of operators here, as the price is fixed lower than that established for newly-mined silver under the proclamation of December last.

No stocks of silver bullion are held at Nevada at present as far as is known.

The Secretary of the Nevada Mine Operators' Association, in an interview with Reuter, said that the President's proclamation gave silver the executive recognition for which the silver mines had been fighting.

80 CENTS PER OZ. HOPED

Nevada operators are hoping for stabilisation at a price of 80 cents per ounce, or more, which they declare is necessary for the profitable operation of large low-grade properties, the exploitation of which is now dormant, and to warrant the inception of development work.—Reuter.

PRODUCTION EFFECT

Silver producers say that nationalisation will not affect or improve production for years to come. They anticipate no change in the present comparatively inactive situation unless the price of newly-mined silver exceeds 64.5 cents per ounce.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

The Proclamation.

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.

Washington, To-day.

The proclamation authorizes the mints to seize all the silver in the United States on August 9. The mints have been directed to deduct for seigniorage and other expenses 61.8-25 per cent. of the silver received and to return to depositors the mount equal to the monetary value of the balance.

Payments will be made in standard silver dollars, silver certificates, or other United States currency

DOMESTIC AND FREE SILVER

The Treasury Secretary, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, states that domestic silver mined since December 21, 1933, may still be delivered to the mints under the proclamation of that date. He states that silver already en route to the United States, prior to the proclamation, will be considered as free silver.

Nationalisation gives the Government the same control of silver as of gold.

The proclamation exempts, Firstly, foreign and domestic silver coins; and secondly, silver of a fineness of .8 or less, which is not entered for industrial, commercial, professional, artistic or monetary use.

The proclamation also exempts silver ore, silver owned by foreign government and foreign central banks, and silver fabricated articles.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Check On All Foreign Transactions.

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.

New York, To-day.

Early reports attributed the rise in the price of silver to Government buying.

—Mr. Henry Morgenthau yesterday ordered consular invoices on silver imports above U.S.$100, thus giving the Treasury a means of checking all foreign transactions.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

SHARP IMPETUS TO U.S. BUSINESS

are now produced with cheap silver and are now being marketed on a level which Americans cannot meet. This will result in Americans again recapturing valuable foreign markets giving business at home a sharp impetus.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Many Present At Funeral of Mr. Lam Chik Min In Canton

[From Our Own Correspondent]

Canton, To-day.

Canton military and civilian officials turned out in full force this morning to pay their last respects to the late Mr. Lam Chik-min, reserve member of the Kuomintang Central Supervisory Committee, who died yesterday at his home, No. 7 Model Village, Tungshan. He was 46 years old.

Inflicted with phthisis for some years, the late Mr. Lam was an ardent supporter of Dr. Sun Yat-sen and became his confidential secretary when he was generalissimo of the Kuomintang force. When Dr. Sun was ousted from Canton in 1922, Mr. Lam accompanied him to the gunboat, Yung Feng, now known as Chung Shan, and assisted him in drafting documents.

Because of his long association with the Kuomintang founder, Mr. Lam was given various government and Party offices in Canton. Among the positions he held were member of South-west Political Council, Kuomintang South-west Executive Committee, Kwangtung Provincial Kuomintang, and the Kwangtung Board of River Conservancy.

Being a good classical scholar and an elegant penman, Mr. Lam was then director of propaganda for the Kuomintang South-west Executive Committee. He was an intimate friend of Kuomintang leaders, such as Messrs. Hu Han-min and Hsiao Fu-chen.

An outspoken critic of the National Government, Mr. Lam wrote several articles opposing the Japan policy as endorsed by Marshal Chiang Kai-shek, Chairman of the Military Affairs Commission, and Mr. Wang Ching-wei, President of the Executive Yuan.

He is survived by a widow, three sons, and two daughters.

To-day's Short Story.

SUTOR

By Albert Richard Wetjen.

HE drew himself up out of the cold surf and sank exhausted to the shingle. He was sick for a long time and it seemed that every atom of his body had its own peculiar pain. His hands were bloody from the rocks; his skin burning from the pounding of the salt sea. All about him there were swirling white mists, clammy and fearful.

The wind whined across the water. Spatters of rain came and went, and over all there was the ceaseless boom-ba-room-boom of the combers on the ugly reefs, followed as always by the swish-swish of the surf subsiding.

How he had reached the shore alive he did not know, and for the while he did not care. He remembered he had been standing on the steamer's after deck, warm and dry inside his greatcoat, while he watched the roaring sullen gray of the wake tossing up and down.

The captain had warned him more than once he'd better be careful; so had the steward. But he was not accustomed to taking advice. He was Sutor, wasn't he? Owned the ship and a dozen like her. Owned a railroad and two sawmills. Worth a good many millions. He'd always had his own way, even about standing on the after deck of a ship with a gale roaring astern of her and the sea lifting almost funnel high.

He hadn't thought there was any real danger. Not until he saw that one big comber coming, rising higher and higher, sleek and marbled with green, the top drawn against the sky like a tight line. He had stared at it for just one second too long. He should have jumped for the companion out of the way; but he hadn't.

There had been a fearful crash, and then water everywhere, tossing him about, over his head, half drowning him. The lifting ship had cleared then and the water roared back, slicking him through the rails as easily as if he had been a fragment of rope yarn or a chip of cork.

About the only accomplishment he possessed was that of swimming and he had swum instinctively and furiously. He had for once exerted himself. It had all but killed him to get out of his greatcoat, but he managed it; then luck had flung against him a cork lifebuoy which the water had lifted from its rest against the rail of the steamer and sent adrift, and he had clung to it, lifting and falling mightly on the sullen waves.

When his eyes were finally clear of spray and he could look around, the ship had disappeared, lost in the swirling mists. He didn't remember much after that, except that currents tugged at him and in an effort to keep warm he threshed his legs and arms about. And then he had suddenly been in the surf, banged here and there, scraped against rocks, escaping death by a miracle to be flung into the creamy shallows all but unconscious and utterly exhausted.

He groaned and sat up after a while, shivering in the damp mist and the chill wind. The shingle was iron hard beneath him. Crabs scuttled away as he moved, their stalky eyes blank. A few gulls drifted above, crying eerily and swerving at the sight of him. He got to his knees, and then weakly to his feet. There was nothing but mist and desolation. On either side the rocky walls of cliffs rose up and were lost in the sky.

He was in a pocket, my God—a sort of cove with shingle running far back until the mist hid it. He did not know what to do. He stared at the great boulders that dotted the shingle, at the clear pools the tide had left between the boulders, at the bunches of kelp and other weeds.

It seemed incredible he should be there. Alone, too. Wasn't he Sutor? He had power. He had had power ever since Old Man Sutor had died; since the old man had left him everything. He had once brought a famous tenor from across the world just to sing for a girl he'd been crazy about! Humph! He had wrecked more than one man because of a whim, hadn't he? Well, at least if he hadn't his managers had at his order. He had sometimes had a vague idea that no one really thought much of him, but what did he care? They didn't care tell him so. He was Sutor, wasn't he.

He stared at the swirling mists; he listened to the whime of the wind, the untamed roar of the sea, the whisper of rain on the cold wet shingle. He surveyed the dim slopes of the cliffs, the eerie birds, the dull gray crabs, and something whimpered inside him.

He shouldn't be there. And he wouldn't be there long. He was sure of that. The captain would turn the boat back at once to look for him. There'd be thousands spent, a million if necessary. He was an important man. Everyone knew that.

He stood drooped, shivering. Just the same he'd have to make the best of it for a few hours. He was thirsty, very thirsty. And he was very tired. He did not ever remember having been very thirsty before. But this time there was no one to bring him liquor. There was no use crooking a finger.

He moved disconsolately, swearing up the shingle, aimlessly. Presently the shingle gave way to damp yellow sand, and finally he brought up short against a wall of rock, high and ragged. There were a few tufts of coarse grass growing miraculously in the crevices. The sea birds increased in number, whirled about him, screaming. He saw a few nests, high up.

He turned to his right and followed the wall of rock. There were caves at intervals, gloomy looking places in the mist. He heard water at last and discovered a small trickle gliding down the face of the rock with green moss beside it. He tasted it, cautious, and then drank.

SUTOR

That was better. He had never known water tasted so good. He drank again, washed some of the salt from his face and hands.

If only he weren't so cold. He pulled out his watch, but it was soaked and had stopped. He wondered how long it would be before the boat came for him. He tried to remember where he was. The captain had said something at lunch about passing close to an island, but he hadn't paid any attention. He wished he had now. He slapped his arms across his chest to keep warm and cursed the captain. Damn him, he should be here by this time.

He went back to the sea and walked up and down the shingle, waiting. He began to get hungry and was anxiously aware that the light was beginning to fail. He was growing so tired he could hardly move, and only the cold kept him from sitting down and dozing. He wasn't in very good condition. He knew that. Nearly forty and pretty thick about the middle. Fat and soft, he supposed. He never had liked work or exercise. Boring. An occasional Turkish bath and a message kept him feeling good.

No need to work when he could hire good managers to look after his interests. No Turkish bath now. He felt like crying. To have so much and be condemned to walk up and down the wet shingle waiting for a damned boat to take him off!

Night was coming on, and there was no sign of the boat. Nothing but the swirling mists, the roaring sea, the gulls, the crabs, the blank sky. It suddenly occurred to him that the boat might not come. But now he came to think of it, did they know he was missing, yet? No one had seen him washed overside.

He had been warned not to walk on the after deck and they might have supposed he would heed that warning and had gone to his room. If they thought that, they wouldn't miss him for hours. They'd probably think he was taking a nap. Wouldn't bother about him until dinner time. Then they'd knock on his door once or twice and think he was asleep and let him alone. He often slept like that and woke up very late to have a special dinner served.

He was Sutor, wasn't he? But it would be awkward now, if they hadn't yet discovered he was gone. The boat would be a hundred miles away before they thought about him, grew worried. And they wouldn't know just where he had been swept off. They might even put it down to suicide. He shuddered.

For the first time he began to be really afraid. He kept hearing strange voices in the mist; kept thinking he saw strange shapes. He remembered all he had ever read of castaways on lonely islands. He might starve to death before they found him. Or he might freeze.

It was nearly dark now. The gulls had disappeared. The crabs had disappeared. The boom and roar of the sea seemed muffled. In a sudden panic he shouted, screamed, cursed the mist and the growing dark, until he was afraid of the sound of his own voice which the walls of the cove beat back at him.

He stumbled about, back from the sea. The sea terrified him. It was so huge, so noisy, so impersonal. It seemed to be laughing. He found a cave at last, back of the yellow sand, where some high tide had flung weed and it had slowly dried. He crept into the weed, huddled into it and crouched down. Slowly he began to accumulate heat, a damp sort of heat; and from terror and exhaustion he dozed.

He had many dreams, or rather picture after picture raced through his half-consciousness. He kept seeing the tight line of the sea's crest as it hovered above the stern of the steamer, before sweeping him away. His feet seemed clogged with lead, his heart seemed to have stopped.

Then he was back in his elaborate offices, smoking a cigar and idly listening to his managers reporting the firm's various activities, wishing they wouldn't bother him. Then again he saw his father, Old Man Sutor, who had started as a deck hand and died a Power on the coast.

His father had never thought much of him. The Old Man had gone up in the air when he'd been at college and had hired a valet. "What!" the Old Man had stormed. "At your age, Can't even dress yourself!" But the Old Man didn't understand. He'd been raised a deck hand and had never managed to shake off his early environment.

It was the Old Man's eternal complaint that he, Young Sutor, was useless. Always wanting him to do things for himself. Kicked about him having a chauffeur; kicked about his drinking; kicked because he wouldn't go to work in one of the sawmills to learn the trade. What did he want to learn the trade for? He was going to inherit, wasn't he? He could always hire good managers.

And his mother had left him an income, anyway. So he'd gone to Europe, pottered about here and there. That had made the Old Man mad, too. "I've been too easy on you," he said towards the last, just before the stroke carried him off. "Too damned easy. I ought to have sent you to sea when you were small. Look at yourself. You're as fat as a slug and not yet thirty. You couldn't even blow your own nose. You can't stand on your own feet and you're too damned lazy to learn. Not worth the powder to blow you to hell."

That had been a ticklish time. The Old Man had threatened to leave his money to a distant nephew. He would have, too, if the stroke hadn't come first, snapping him out of life in his hale sixties. A good break. There had been no one to bother young Sutor after that. No one at all.

Everyone was pleasant with him. Everyone waited on him. He was a Power on the coast. He had vaguely formed plans of going in for big projects some day, like Napoleon, and showing them all just what he was made of.

He tossed and turned in his dozing, muttering to himself, lulled a little by the roar of the surf at the mouth of the cove. The ship ought to be back for him at any time. He'd take good care to stay on shore after this. He'd only gone on the damned trip anyway on the insistence of his general manager. Said it would be good for him to visit the foreign agents, good for business.

Well, that was over. He'd stick to liners after this, big vessels, safe and comfortable, where you could stay in your suite and drink champagne with the girls. To hell with business.

He awoke with the first grayness of dawn, awoke groaning and cold and wondering where he was. It was some time before he could collect his faculties. He was always sluggish and heavy in the morning. It usually took a drink to get him in shape for the shower.

He blinked, stretched painfully, and looked at his hands, all cracked and scarred. He remembered the ship and the sea, the surf, the crabs and the birds, and with a sudden frightened curse staggered out of the little cave to the shingle again.

The mists were still swirling with the wind. The surf still reached white and roaring towards the sea. The gulls still wavered back and forth, crying. Sutor swallowed hard and felt tears of impotent rage and of more potent terror spring to his eyes. Why in hell didn't the boat come back for him? What was wrong with the captain?

He lifted his voice and shouted: "Hey! Hey, there!" But only echoes answered, and he grew hoarse at last. He stumbled to find the little trickle of water down the cliff face, drank, and then grew aware that he was hungry.

R.A.F. ADJUTANT SHOT.

Fatally Wounded By Gun At Kai Tack.

FLYING OFFICER G. B. MURPHY

Flying Officer George B. Murphy, Royal Air Force Adjutant at Kai Tack, was fatally wounded by a shot from his own revolver while cleaning the weapon last night. He was admitted to the Kowloon Hospital at 7.45 p.m. with a wound in his left breast, but died at 9.45 p.m.

It was learned that Flying Officer Murphy was sitting in the Officers' Mess at 7 o'clock last night, and that he had his gun, believed to be a revolver, in his hands. He was examining or cleaning it. Somehow it was discharged, and the bullet penetrated his left breast. It is not known whether he was alone at the time.

Squadron Leader Kearey explained to the Press that Flying Officer Murphy had a passion for firearms, that they were his hobby. There could be no suggestion that the shooting was anything but accidental, he pointed out.

The funeral will take place today.

Flying Officer Murphy, it is believed, only arrived in Hong Kong from Singapore three months ago.

The funeral will take place to-day, leaving Wellington Barracks at 4.45 p.m. and passing the Monument, Happy Valley at 5.15 p.m.

SUTOR

He didn't know what to do. He had nothing but the surf-torn clothes he stood in. A few keys on a ring, a ruined watch, a few coins, some sodden cigarettes and matches. He wished he had a fire, but he had no idea how to make one. The matches were certainly no good. And then what was he going to eat?

He stared at his reflection in the clear water of a pool and was horrified. He needed a shave. His face was scratched; and there were hollows in the fat cheeks under his haggard eyes. He hardly recognised himself.

He straightened again and looked helplessly about. He tried to remember what it was people did when they were shipwrecked, what he had read on the subject, but he could recall nothing. He walked toward the surf and found the tide had gone far out, exposing some of the rocks. They were sheeted with dark blue mussels, which he recognised.

He tore some off, making his fingers bleed and breaking his nails. He hammered the shells open and clawed inside for the slimy mollusc, shuddering as he swallowed it. He wondered how long he could live on raw mussels.

After he had appeased the first pangs of his hunger he gathered together driftwood, with the vague idea of making a fire, but when he had the wood he stared at it blankly. His matches were ruined.

He remembered reading somewhere that savages made a fire by rubbing two sticks together, so he squatted down and rubbed two sticks together for half-an-hour, but without result. He flung them away then with a curse and went back up the cove to get a drink.

As the sun rose the swirling mists began to ebb away until he saw a streak of blue sky. He wandered about idly, peevish and sullen, amusing himself by throwing stones at the crabs. He hit one, crushing it, and curiously watched the writhing body until it was still; then he cracked the claws and ate the meat out of them.

Well, he wasn't going to starve, anyway! But it wasn't going to be pleasant, either, eating raw crab meat and raw mussels. He stared at the heaving blue sea from which the mists were fast lifting, but there was no sign of the steamer.

He turned and inspected the cove he was in, like a pocket. High cliff walls all around. They ran right out into the breakers, too, so he could not wade around them. He wondered if there were any other human beings on the island. If he could get to the top of the cliffs he'd be able to see, perhaps.

He examined the walls to find what seemed the easiest place and tried to climb, but he only split his fingers and hurt himself sliding. In an access of sudden rage he dashed at the wall, leaping up, clawing up for perhaps 15 feet, until he was exhausted and dropped to the bottom again.

He gave up after that. Let them come and look for him. They'd have to look. They wouldn't dare go on with the voyage without him. He'd fire all of them.

He disconsolately tried rubbing the two sticks together again. He ate some more mussels. He went back to the end of the cove and drank. He made two or three more futile attempts to scale the cliffs and then gave up in a fit of weeping.

He swore aloud, cursed shrilly the sea and the sky, the indifferent gulls, the crabs, the booming surf. Damn them! He sat down and stared at his pile of driftwood, his mind finally a blank.

He roused himself when he got cold, walked about again. There was no sense in his getting worried. They'd come and look for him all right. He remembered he'd been lost once in a forest, wandering away from a picnic party, and they'd had the state troopers out all night looking for him. He was that important.

He imagined right now the steamer was ploughing back for the island. Or perhaps she was searching the sea for his body. That picture made him shiver. Suppose they did think he was drowned and gave up, went away? But they'd certainly come to the island wouldn't they? They would make inquiries. He stared at the sea and the sky. Didn't they know he was Sutor, the Sutor? They didn't have to be so damned indifferent about it.

He made a few more half-hearted attempts to scale the cliff walls, but soon gave up. The efforts exhausted him. They hurt his feet, his hands, his round body. What the hell! All he had to do was wait. Let the others do the work. He sat down again and talked to himself.

And that night, whimpering with cold terror, he crawled into his cave and huddled beneath the dried weed, his teeth chattering and every muscle aquiver. He kept remembering Old Man Sutor's words, in that last interview before the stroke took him, "You can't stand on your own feet and you're too damned lazy to learn." They'd come looking for him soon. What did they think he was paying them for?

It was two weeks before they found him. A laughing half-dozen of young men after gulls' eggs came down the cliff face and stopped abruptly upon beholding the ragged figure bent despondently forward, hands over knees and back to a large rock.

Before the figure was a pile of driftwood, at its feet two sticks that had been rubbed together a little. A large pile of cracked mussel shells and the empty shells of crabs stood to one side. And that was all. The egg hunters walked around and looked. And then they sent for the captain of the steamer, who had been searching the island shores for a washed-up body. The captain came and looked, too.

"He's been here a long time," said the gulls' egg hunters. "Exposure got him."

The captain looked at the pile of mussel shells and nodded, plucking his grey beard. "Exposure and fright," he agreed.

"Funny he didn't build himself a shack," said the gulls' egg hunters. "There's enough wood about. He could have made a fire with his watch crystal. He'd have been pretty comfortable, too; there's plenty of grub around. Crabs, fish, eggs. For that matter he could have climbed up the cliffs. It's only a mile to the village."

"He couldn't climb," said the captain reflectively. "He couldn't build a shack. He couldn't do much of anything and he was too damned lazy to learn. I'll bet a month's pay he just sat down and waited for us to come and find him. I'd say he's been dead about two days."

"Two or three," agreed the gulls egg hunters. And they took him up the cliffs by one of the half-a-dozen steep but practical paths.

TALKIE TALKS

Oriental Enterprise

I WENT the other week down to a five o'clock show at the deservedly popular "Oriental," and was agreeably surprised to see the sea of eager faces. They have to queue up at almost every show, and the dress-circle is as crowded as the rest of the house. Why?—because the far-seeing Manager, Mr. Hugo, studies his patron's pockets. What a showman he is too. Each film that comes on is different. A few days of drama, then a musical, then humour then an animal picture—striving all the time to please all tastes.

Now next week we have Marian Davies with "crooner" Bing Crosby in "Going Hollywood," then a drama expertly played by Mary Astor and Ricardo Cortez—"Men of Chance," and afterwards a film, which I consider the best thing Cecil B. de Mille has given to the talkies. "This Day and Age." The children are specially fine, also Charles Bickford and Judith Allan. (Oriental).

"Call It Luck"

"CALL it Luck" gives Herbert Mundin a great opportunity as the cockney "cabby" who wins a fortune in a Sweep, also pretty Pat Patterson and Charles Starrett. If you like race-track stories here is your chance. There are a few laughs, some suspense, plenty of finish. On the stage we have a pert little Miss from the Film Colony, who has charmed us more than once on the screen—Marjorie White. Her husband is a big asset in her delightful "Musical Turn." I have no doubt that there will be enormous crowds who will derive their greatest "thrill" in seeing this clever and lively little girl in person. Go along and "give her a big hand." She has come a long way, and we all want her to carry back to Hollywood, only the kindest thoughts of her audiences in Hong Kong. (Queen's).

"Hello Sister"

"HELLO Sister" comedy situations by inimitable Zasu Pitts. It is an age-old plot, but the romance of two lonely souls in a big city is put over quite convincingly by James Dunn and Boots Mallory.

"The Mad Genius"

This will be followed most likely by a Warner's 1931 release "The Mad Genius," starring John Barrymore as the crippled son of a famous danseuse, who can achieve his ambitions as a dancer only through a pretty protege, played by Marian Marsh who was his Trilby in "Svengali."

"Havana Widows"

Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell ring all the fun they can in "Havana Widows." Frank McHugh and Allen Jenkins are also in fine form. You can't go wrong on this one.

"Bureau Of Missing Persons"

Glenda Farrell and Allen Jenkins are also among the strong support in a "Bureau of Missing Persons," with Bette Davis and Pat O'Brien in the leading roles. All coming shortly to the Alhambra.

"Manhattan Melodrama"

THE attraction of "Manhattan Melodrama," lies in the excellence of the acting from a trio such as Myrna Loy, Clark Gable and William Powell. It opens spectacularly with the "General Slocum" disaster out of which are tossed two orphan boys into Manhattan's East side. One is studious, while the other "shoots" craps. Years later the student has beome District Attorney (William Powell) and the other a top-money gambler. (Clark Gable).

His mistress, (perfectly played by Myrne Loy, in her first starring vehicle) loves him madly, but when he refuses to marry her, she leaves him.

She then meets the District Attorney and, being an American melodrama, soon marries him. Well, enough of the outline of the story. The end is dramatic in the extreme.

No—I am not telling you that this was the last film ever seen by John Dillinger. It has more attractions than that. The acting is superb.

Clark Gable is as convincing as was in "Free Soul," No one deserves elevation to stardom more than the captivating Myrna Loy, and William Powell turned in such an outstanding performance in this and "The Thin Man" (with Miss Loy again) that M. G. M. rewarded him with a long term contract.

Nat Pendleton is starved in his part and Leo Carrillo appears briefly, but effectively. The settings are very good indeed, and the atmosphere of New York life admirably caught.

One of my "pet" directors is at the megaphone, W. S. van Dyke, and let me specially mention the super photography of the one and only real Chinese cameraman-James Wong Howe, A. S. C. No one would be so foolish as too miss this. (Queen's—Sunday Attraction).

"Jennie Gerhardt"

THEODORE Dresier's novel "Jennie Gerhardt," a biographical film wherein wistful Sylvia Sydney walks through the "Back Street" of Donald Cook's life. She gives unselfishly of her love and is discarded. Donald Cook, in his first big acting chance, aids the star, and the story holds one's interest from first to last.

Edward Arnold as "Senator Brander" stands out—as usual. For a long time I have been watching this man after scene, but it was not till "Sadie McKee" that his talent was fully recognized. In that film, as the drunken millionaire he gave a performance that I will never forget. In the splendid cast surrounding the suffering heroine, Mary Astor, H. B. Warner and adorable little Cora Sue Collins stand out. Don't miss this one. (King's).

Modern Physicians As Models

UNSELFISHNESS EXAMPLE

SPECIAL TO CHINA MAIL.

(By Telegraph, Copyright, Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1894. Received August 10, 2.01 a.m.)

Rochester, Minn, To-day.

In a speech here on Wednesday, President Roosevelt paid tribute to the famous surgeon brothers, Drs. William and Charles Mayo.

He declared that the unselfish service of the medical leaders was necessary to the success of his own social programme.

He called attention to the fact that medical science shows how patience and the application of skill and courage can control and improve conditions.

He said that Democracy anticipates the day when public officials will have the qualities the modern physician displays, such as devotion to public good, unselfish service and consideration.—United Press per S. E. Levy and Company.

F.B.I. TO SEND MISSION TO MANCHUKUO

The mission is also welcomed by the "Morning Post" which declares that friendship with Japan can best be confirmed by mutual understanding and by seeking common solution to common problems. In this spirit, the mission promises a source of political as well as economic gain to both countries.

The Daily Herald, however, thinks that the success of the mission will depend on political concessions from Britain and adds that under the circumstances the mission appears to be a very questionable manoeuvre.—Reuter.

AMERICANS WANT PENNY POST.

Described as the longest document of its kind ever written on one continuous sheet of paper, a petition one mile in length requesting the return of two-cent postage in the United States as been presented to Congressmen here.

CONFIDENCE RETURNING TO UNITED STATES

Business men, farmers and workers were realising the "New Dealer's" progress and were already confident.

ELECTION ENDORSED

President Roosevelt indirectly endorsed the election to the Senate of Mr. Robert M. La Follette, saying that both the Wisconsin Senators were old friends and had co-operated greatly.

He contrasted the "forces seeking individual profit gained at the expense of their fellows" with the "New Deal."

He said that confidence was returning as a result of agricultural planning and N.R.A. relief.

"Government co-operation is putting the golden rule into the temples of finance, and saving home-owners from the stark threat of foreclosure. Small savers and investors, for the first time, rightly believe their savings are secure," he declard. He indicated that the strongest would follow the present programme.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Effect On Foreign Exchange.

MILD FAR EAST ADVANCE

New York, To-day.

The nationalisation of silver caused little reaction in foreign exchange. Far Eastern rates responded with a mild advance, but the major European currency rates were easier, with trading dull.

The announcement caused a mild rally in stocks which were depressed as the result of President's speech at Green Bay.

Congressional monetary leaders applauded the proclamation and emphasised that it was in no way an inflation manoeuvre.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Silver Trading Suspended.

New York, To-day.

The Commodity Exchange has suspended trading in silver, effective immediately, as a result of the nationalisation order.

A Commodity Exchange announcement declares:

"In view of the fact that silver has been nationalised via a Presidential decree, trading in silver will be suspended immediately. A further announcement will be made as soon as possible."—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.
